Abstract This review discusses Zygmunt Bauman's 'Retrotopia', published shortly after the renowned sociologists' death, in the light of his engagement with the thought of Pope Francis during the last years of his life.

The emergence of retrotopia is interwoven with the deepening gulf between power and politics that is a defining feature of our contemporary liquid modern world – the gulf between the ability to get things done and the capability of deciding what things need to be done, a capability once vested with the territorially sovereign state.
