OA050P - ERIN DESIREE

Summary While on holiday in 1925, four-year-old Michael Tolkien lost his beloved toy dog on the beach at Filey in Yorkshire. To console him, his father, J.R.R. Tolkien, improvised a story about Rover, a real dog who is magically transformed into a toy and is forced to seek out the wizard who wronged him in order to be returned to normal.

J.R.R.Tolkien was a prolific storyteller to his children, though few of his early stories survive. Roverandom was a particular favourite, so much so that Tolkien wrote it out and even illustrated it himself. But for over 70 years it has remained unpublished.

So Tolkien shelved Roverandom even though he had revised it repeatedly and made lovely illustrations for it, and wrote The Lord of the Rings instead. This story began, like The Hobbit, as something Tolkien made up for his children. His second son, Michael, lost a little toy dog that he loved dearly while they were at the beach, and Tolkien made up a whole series of adventures for the dog to help his son process the loss.

Roverandom was inspired by events that occurred in September 1925, when J.R.R. Tolkien and his family stayed in a cottage overlooking the sea at Filey in the north-east of England. Early in the holiday, his son Michael, then nearly five, lost a beloved toy dog while playing on the beach with his father and elder brother John, and was heartbroken.

Roverandom, along with Letters from Father Christmas, are stories Tolkien wrote for his children, which I think is an awesome thing to do. But Roverandom goes beyond being simple and shallow and has a lot of content that stretches the minds and abilities of children and provides entertainment for adults at the same time.
