Likewise, tribalism (Al-asabiyyah) is a horrendous sin, which is defined in Islam as loyalty to one's tribe or family over the principles of justice. The Prophet (Peace be upon him) disavowed himself and Islam from anyone who acts according to the various ideological and cultural manifestations of tribalism.

In this two-part series, author Alex Simon discusses the evolution and increasingly fragmented nature of Sunni tribalism in Iraq from the era of Ottoman occupation through the rise of the so-called Islamic State, and its implications for the future of the Iraqi polity. Second, tribalism in society has led to marriage for incorrect reasons. Marriage, as deemed sacred by religion, always had pre-requisites for approval. Things such as a person's character, religious commitment, and financial capacity would be examined traditionally in order for marriages to proceed.
